Michael Holder : Creations End: Core Rule Book before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Creations End: Core Rule Book:

0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. you're a fan of bad gaming with more money than common senseBy DJAs of this writing, the book is listed for over $100. It's worth maybe $5 to someone interested in gutting maybe two pages worth of mechanics for use in their ADD/Palladium games, and that's overly generous (both in terms of cost and usefulness). If you're paying more than that, you're a fan of bad gaming with more money than common sense. To repeat what I've said elsewhere: "there really should be an apostrophe in the title of the game, and a dozen better games have come and gone that do everything this game does, only better. Its what Demon the Fallen might have looked like if Palladium Books released it in 1983, only with more empty space. I hate bashing on a product that feels like a first effort by an amateur author, but I'd also hate for somebody to drop $30 on a game this poor."

"...the blood of angels shall cover the earth" You have been offered an invitation to journey through present-day earth. A world that is lacking faith and struggling to survive terrorism, politics, and war. A world where dark forces gather, where fallen angels pray, and where demons hunger for the taste of human flesh. A world where dark angels look to end a war that has lasted since the beginning of time. A war that...if not stopped...will force man to the brink of annihilation... Creations End is a new role-playing game that follows religious beliefs and is set in the present day. An interesting challenge for all to enjoy!
