Tisha Bender : P.U.N.C.H. before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised P.U.N.C.H.:

In all honesty I can't recall the last time I read a novel that made me smile or laugh out loud. Thankfully Tisha Bender has rectified the situation with her latest novel, P.U.N.C.H. So if our American political landscape has you down in the dumps, or if you are finding that winter is dragging along too slowly, I recommend a little dose of Dr. Bender's very clever cure-all.0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Who says academia is for the lofty-minded?By Susan G.This is a very entertaining and well-written tale of academia with a twist. I look forward to many more from this author!0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Five StarsBy CustomerA great beach read. Filled with insights on the perils of online teaching by a writer who does it.

The complacent Maximillian Dreyfuss, head of a recently formed online university, was pleased, amongst other things, with the name "P.U.N.C.H. an acronym for Posting University Network Courses Here thought up by Letty from the Religious Studies Department, with whom he'd been enjoying a brief affair at that time. Punch also refers to the alcohol served in the occasional P.U.N.C.H parties on campus, as well as the emotional and sometimes physical blows Maximillian delivers to those around him. All was going well in the P.U.N.C.H. empire, with increasing numbers of online classes and eager students each semester, but then events take a surprising plunge and no virtual stone is left unturned in this insightful and humorous send-up of academic life on the web.

About the AuthorTisha Bender was born in London, and went to the University of Bristol, and the London School of Economics for graduate school. Since coming to America, she has taught at Cornell Off Campus College and The New School, then in the Rutgers Writing Program since 2004. P.U.N.C.H. is her first published novel; she is also the author of two editions of Discussion-Based Online Teaching to Enhance Student Learning. She lives in the hills of New Jersey.
